Harvest & Winemaking

The previously selected grapes were handpicked during the morning hours only in efforts to keep their temperature low. The clusters were then taken to the press, cooling and destemming them. 40% of the grapes were cold macerated. The free-run wine was separated by applying gentle pressure. The juice was transferred to stainless steel tanks, where it was clarified before being inoculated with select specific yeast strains. 30% was then poured into French oak barrels and the remaining 70% was transferred to American oak barrels for alcoholic fermentation to take place. The wine was aged sur lie in barrels for 4 months, The total barrel aging time was 6 months, after which the proteins and tartrates were stabilized by lowering the wine temperature to -40 C (24,8°F) Prior to bottling, the wine was subject to a very fine filtration process.
